The Periodic Review Board, by consensus, determined continued law of war detention of the detainee is no longer necessary to protect against a continuing significant threat to the security of the United States.

In making this determination, the Board considered the detainee's plans for the future and commitment not to repeat past mistakes. The Board found the detainee credible on both issues and also noted that he had a well-established, educated family with the willingness and ability to support him upon his return. The Board also considered the detainee's level of involvement with al-Qa'ida, including his lack of ties to at-large extremists, and the fact that he is expected to reside in Ta'izz, one of the more stable regions of Yemen, upon any return to Yemen. The detainee's behavior in detention, including his largely peaceful, nonviolent approach to detention and his positive attitude toward future potential participation in a rehabilitation program were also noted by the Board.

The PRB recommends that the detainee be transferred with the standard security assurances, as negotiated by the Guantanamo Detainee Transfer Working Group, and the conditions normally associated with conditional detention, specifically: 1) the security situation improves in Yemen; 2) an appropriate rehabilitation program becomes available; or 3) an appropriate third country resettlement option becomes available, although the PRB strongly recommends that the detainee be transferred to Yemen due to the detainee's desire to return to his family, the integral role the detainee will play in his family, and the support the family can provide upon his return.
