The Periodic Review Board, by consensus, determined that continued law of war detention of the detainee is no longer necessary to protect against a continuing significant threat to the national security of the United States.

In making this determination, the Board acknowledges that the detainee has made threatening statements in the past year; however, in light of the factors and conditions of transfer identified below, the Board believes the threat he may pose can be mitigated. The Board considered the detainee's low level of training and lack of a leadership role in al Qaida or the Taliban, the detainee's candor in answering questions from the Board regarding his pre-detention activity and motivations, the detainee's improved compliance and acceptance of responsibility for prior non-compliance, the detainee's willingness to work on how he manages his emotions and frustrations in detention and efforts to be a positive influence on camp life, the support available to the detainee from his counsel and outside organizations if he were to be transferred and the detainee's efforts to improve his post-detention plans.

The PRB recommends the following conditions that relate to the detainee's transfer: Transfer to a country with a strong rehabilitation and reintegration program and appropriate security assurances as agreed to by the relevant USG departments and agencies.
